

At some point people need exposure to a diversity of viewpoints for us to have a functioning democracy. If large corporations control the media and espouse a point of view that favors their interests then this limits the political options that will be considered. Over the long run that is a bad thing. I actually think a centrally planned economy is a bad thing, and that democracy is also good economics. Politicians agree with that in public but their actions are contrary nowadays.